Pillows & Duvets

A close-up photograph of a hand holding a piece of raw, downy material, likely a feather or down, against a light background. The material is white and fluffy, with some orange-colored down visible at the bottom. The hand is holding the material from the bottom right, and the background is a soft, out-of-focus light color.

Raw Materials

Down & Feathers

Down

Down is as delicate as a snowflake, with a three-dimensional structure of light, fluffy barbs that are as soft as silk. These fine filaments extend from an almost invisible core, forming intricate branches that trap large amounts of air, enhancing insulation.

Weighing only 0.001 to 0.002 grams per piece, down is exceptionally lightweight. A single kilogram contains an immense number of these fine fibers, making it one of the most efficient natural insulators.

Down forms the soft undercoating of waterfowl, such as geese and ducks. Unlike land fowl like turkeys and chickens, which lack down, these fine, insulating feathers grow beneath the outer plumage, primarily concentrated in the breast area.

Down & Feather

Feathers are nature's perfect balance of structure and softness, with a unique quill and barbed structure that enhances both durability and comfort. These natural fibers provide added support and resilience to bedding products like pillows and duvets. Feathers trap air within their flexible structure, offering excellent insulation while maintaining a lighter, more supportive feel than down alone.

Each feather, though slightly heavier than down, offers a balanced combination of softness and firmness, ideal for maintaining shape and providing consistent comfort throughout use.

Sourced from the same waterfowl as down, feathers are a key component in luxurious, long-lasting bedding, ensuring both warmth and support.
